Cultural diversity has been defined as “a system of beliefs and behaviors that recognizes and respects the presence of all diverse groups in an organization or society, acknowledges and values their socio-cultural differences, and encourages and enables their continued contribution within an inclusive cultural context which empowers all within the organization or society.”¹ Our community narratives frequently contain stories of people from all walks of life coming together. As helping professionals, we know the importance of cultural competency in the practice environment. Cultural competency focuses on gaining knowledge and understanding of different cultures and practices. However, in order to provide a client-centered and ethical provision of care – a newer idea has emerged around the concept of cultural humility. In this thought-provoking discussion, we will take this practice one step further to acknowledge and reflect on our personal experiences, biases, and prejudices. Embarking on a journey of critical self-reflection, discovery, and humility. Referencing professional ethical standards and frameworks, we will apply and discuss relevant standards as it relates to cultural humility, incorporating cultural humility elements within the clinical setting, and advocating for equity within systems and institutions of power.

Linda Ellis has served as the Executive Director of the Health Initiative since January of 2002. She has Master degrees in both theology and family therapy.

As the Executive Director of The Health Initiative, Linda has expanded both the reach and reputation of the organization, developing a strong network of healthcare providers committed to providing culturally sensitive care to all members of the LGBT community.
