As our population ages, the number of persons with dementia is also on the rise. Currently, it is estimated that about 50 million people worldwide (over 5 million in the US alone) suffer from some type of dementia. As stakeholders in elder care, it is critical that we come together to learn best practices and innovative, evidenced-based care models that have been successful in person-centered dementia care. This ground-breaking symposium sets out to do this through thought-provoking presentations as well as open-dialogue and discussions with our peers. Our keynote speaker is esteemed, international dementia-expert Eloy Van Hal, one of the original founders of the Dementia Village in the Netherlands. His presentation focuses on his unique concept – reviewing six integral pillars. He will also discuss practical applications to apply and replicate the concept in other places. During our day of learning, we will also feature Scott Tarde of the Glenner Town Square in CA (and recently appeared in the Wall Street Journal), which is the first Dementia Village concept launched in the United States. He will review his creative model which focuses on adult day care and reminiscence therapy. In addition, Carolyn Cook, renowned Atlanta actress and caregiver for her mother with dementia, will be using the art of theater/drama to allow the audience a unique lens into the eyes of the person with dementia and the caregiver – as she acts out a one-act/one-person play through both perspectives. From here, we will further explore the person-centered approach– exploring the definition and an interactive Q/A session with Ms. Cook – interviewed by Anne McSweeney, LCSW reviewing practical applications that can be applied for caregivers and persons with dementia. With two additional panel discussions interspersed, our day is jam-packed of the most current information and experts around dementia care worldwide.
