Where the Directive Hits the Road: Real Life Examples of Proxy Decision Making

As helping professionals, we often have the privilege of walking alongside our clients and their families during some of life's most difficult and vulnerable times. Medical crises are one such moment - they can happen unexpectedly at any age, leaving families and loved ones to make difficult healthcare decisions on their loved one's behalf. As we strive to ensure our clients' preferences for health care are honored and respected, advanced directives can clearly outline care wishes and the patient's designated proxy, who can make decisions in the event they are unable to do so. As helping professionals, we know that real-life situations are nuanced and rarely alike. In this informative presentation, expert presenters from Metta Johnson & Associates will guide us through several case scenarios to examine the Georgia regulations and codes that encompass advanced directives and demonstrate the importance of advanced care planning in healthcare. Providers will gain the information and resources necessary to assist clients and their families navigate advanced care planning and the difficult conversations and decisions that follow a loved one's medical emergency.
