A “Traditional” Death

Providing Culturally Competent End-of-Life Care

The ways in which patients view death and dying are as diverse as the patients themselves. In many cases, the interpretation of the end-of-life stage is shaped by cultural, religious, and personal traditions and experiences. In this eye-opening presentation, course attendees will gain insight to various traditions at the end-of-life. Experienced providers from Capstone Hospice will outline several end-of-life traditions, how these traditions intersect with the hospice setting, and what providers can do to support patients and families honor these important traditions. Participants will leave this informative course with a better understanding of the end-of-life traditions they may encounter in their everyday practice.
