As healthcare professionals, we work with diverse patient populations; as such, we must be skilled in meeting the unique health care needs of these populations. Implicit biases can hinder the health care professional's ability to accomplish this task. During this presentation, we will explore the science underlying implicit bias and the ways in which bias contributes to health disparities. We will also learn practical strategies for mitigating implicit bias that can be incorporated into clinical practice. Additionally, we will discuss ethical standards and the ethical implications of implicit bias. Using an interactive format and dynamic presenters, this training will keep you engaged and learning from start to finish!
